A gathering place for important conversation is the unique triangle of the campus.

Harry E. Wood is old, but familiar, sturdy and architectually different from the average high school.

Harry E. Wood High School

Every school day of the year students at Harry E. Wood walk or ride through the heart of their city. In the morning it is as if they set the pace for an awakening city which throbs with the rumble of commerce and industry, rushes toward civic betterment, ponders a huge governmental complex, and goads its citizens to look for a better life.

While the city is active, Wood students are in the classroom seeking ways and means to cope with Indianapolis, Indiana's largest metropolitan area with a population of one million.

Midtown schooling is not easy for the student. There is not much grass, and few trees dot the school area. Every available piece of ground is precious. To the first-time visitor the school appears odd-shaped, coming to a sharp point where Madison Avenue meets Meridian Street. A new gym is barely visible among tall buildings and warehouses.

But as individual as the building, are the students and faculty. They go to the only high school in the very heart of their city.

Many students live closeby, walking home for lunch with neighborhood friends.

The City-County Building looms above the school and the Indianapolis governmental complex.

In the heart of industry

Students pass daily through the city's financial center.

A unique advertising display workshop provides a lesson in free enterprise just across the street from school.

and business

Huge semi-trailers roll past the high school carrying Indianapolis' reputation as a transportation crossroads of America. Just three blocks north much of central Indiana's retail and financial business is transacted, and surrounding the school are pharmaceutical, machinery, automotive, and truck manufacturers, meat plants, railroad depots, paper product companies and a host of others.

All this activity looms as opportunity for the Wood student. He has a feel for the might of the free enterprise system, because he is in the middle of it and can see the result of American enterprise and ingenuity.

South Street is hectic when the huge semi-trailers roar.

Practical training makes the student available for the business market right after graduation.

Student sesquicentennial programs help raise funds for the children's museum.

Students have easy access to the state capitol building.

Within sight from the school sidewalk is the City-County Building.

In the heart of government, civic life

No other Indianapolis student can take a walk to the statehouse or Monument Circle on his lunch hour. While every Hoosier knows about his state capital, few have the chance to see government in action first-hand as the Wood student does. It is not strange for a civics class to convene in the gallery of the state legislature or the drama group to visit Clowes Hall. Above all a student can become involved in his city.

"Kids today are better than they ever were," Principal Richard E. Emery tells a distinguished audience as he accepts the 11th District American Legion outstanding citizen award.

Harry E. Wood High School is home to 2,463 students.

This is Harry E. Wood High

Harry E. Wood is an old school with large outdated windows, tall corridors, and many floors. It lacks the vastness and shininess of the newer models, but it has a unique personality. From administration and faculty through student leaders and students, Wood is a school with belief in the individual.

That no man has to accept his lot or station in life is a philosophy. Everything is geared to prepare students to grasp opportunity which is everywhere just outside the high school doors. Harry E. Wood is in the heart of the city, but more important, it has a heart of its own.

A lamp post is a convenient place for study.

Visiting Monument Circle is a nice change of pace.

Teachers and students communicate with each other in class discussions.

A school in which to learn

A desire to excel is not enough. Opportunity and instruction are also important. Harry E. Wood carries on a full program in the broad humanities with seminars, field trips, and honors programs probing all areas of social and cultural life.

Realizing that many students are impatient to get out into the adult world, the faculty has also built a program of practical job skills that may be acquired in a short high school span.

But basically the school's curriculum is based upon the acquisition of knowledge. Whether it be skill to operate a punch press or experiment in the nearby pharmaceutical laboratory, knowledge is the key. It opens doors to exciting opportunities that exist just across the street from the high school.

Humanities seminar students visit fabulous Clowes Hall.

Gifted classes develop their own Indiana history museum.

Scientific wonders are 450 times more interesting under a powerful microscope.

Hrond Gosparian, from Iran, gets an American high school diploma and congratulations from Principal Richard Emery.

A nearby street corner bus stop is a convenient place for students to talk.

Serious decisions are made in consultation with guidance counselors.

Wanda Board and Gywn Mauler, honor students, look at their names inscribed on the honor plaque.

To mature

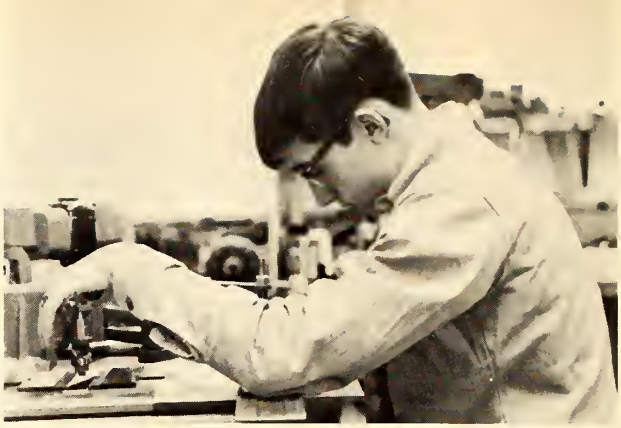
Sometimes it is imperative that the maturing process develops quickly. With the adult world crowding in, the student must grow up without an interim experimental period after high school. He has a chance to do this in a broad extra-curricular and leadership testing program at the school.

Faculty and students meet, discuss problems, and find solutions for special events, club activities, student government, classroom work, or personal affairs. Each activity is designed to develop maturity in the student and to add to the prestige of the school.

It takes talent and maturity on the part of Doug Lewis and Tom Enochs to m. c. at the national Thespian convention at Portland, Ore.

Students want to help in their community.

These are Wood High School students on their way to class at the Indiana University Dental School.



Difficult engraving skill is learned in the Diversified Co-operative Education program.

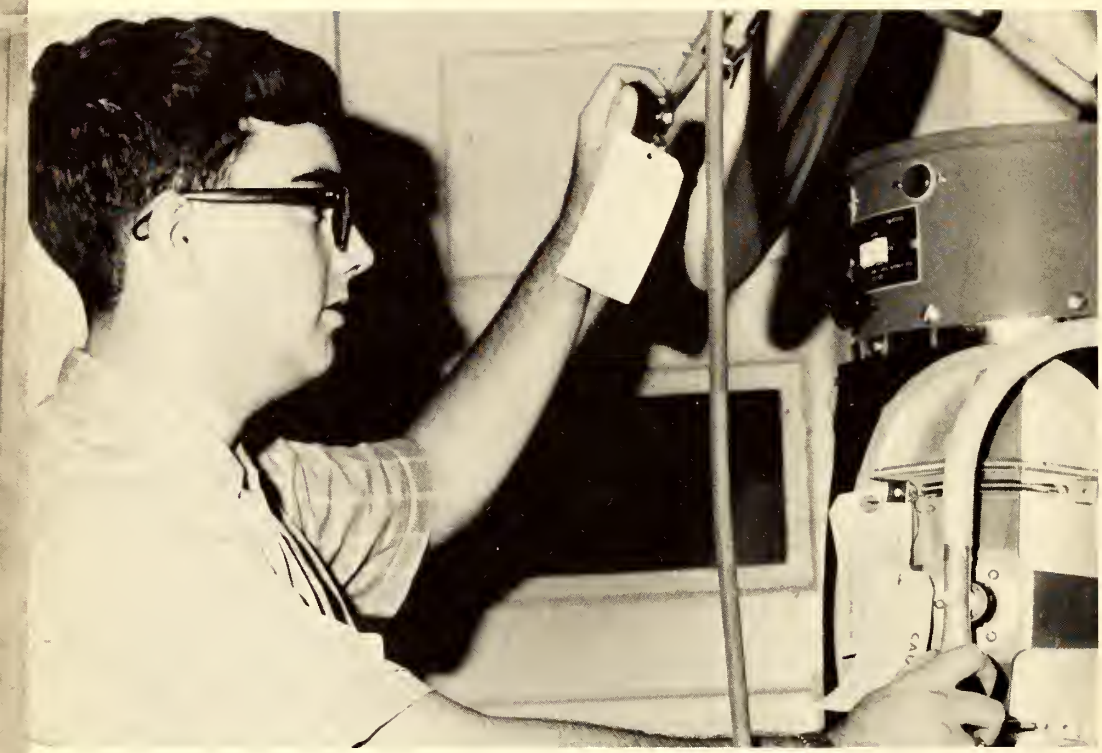
A dental assistant's career begins for a Wood student.

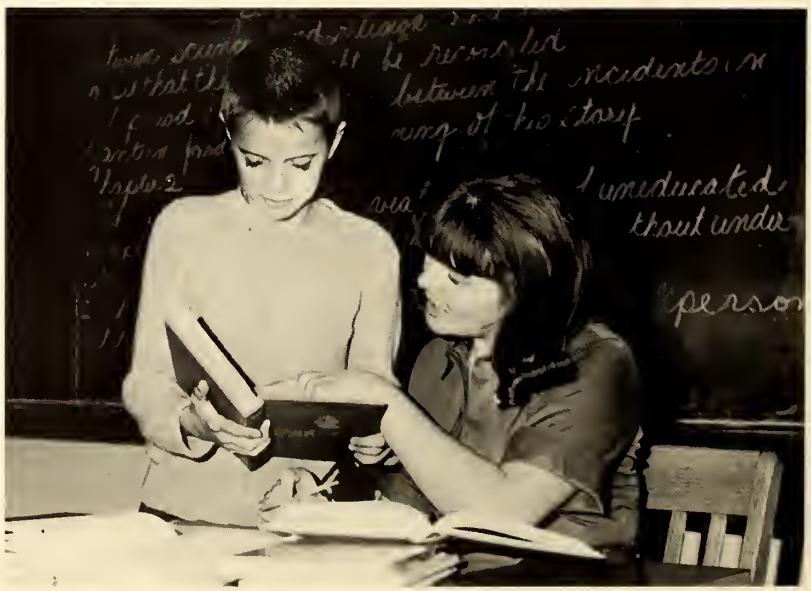
To meet life

Wood students don't prepare for life, they meet it head on—on the part-time jobs that many must hold to help their families or to earn spending money for themselves; in the vocational program where they must develop skills that are salable in business or industry; in neighborhood youth groups where they help others and themselves.

Success stories about graduates are numerous, and most of the case histories include significant examples of learning, maturing, and living during a Harry E. Wood High School career.

Students exhibit home economics training before thousands of visitors at the Home Show.





Wood's stability lies in its academic offering—a curriculum range geared to a wide sampling of interests, abilities, and student goals. No student is shortchanged in academic challenge. He learns early that life is not laid out neatly for the high school graduate, and that success involves study and hard work. Knowledge and drive are the great equalizers and both are nutured in the classrooms at Harry E. Wood.

ACADEMICS

James Kriete and Lolita Thompson play lesson recordings for their French class.

Means for writing and speaking effectively and correctly are developed through constant practice. Wood's language arts program offers classes in journalism, dramatics, reading, and public speaking in conjunction with the basic English courses.

Knowledge of a second language has become increasingly important because of the demand for world-wide communication. To meet this demand, Spanish and French have been added to the Language arts curriculum.

English Awards Day winner Keith Sarden is presented his trophy by Mrs. Scofield.

Language and history are basis of learning

Featuring displays of Indiana history, the history mobile was outside school a full day to give Wood students an opportunity to learn.

Elaine Masters uses an ink blot to test her psychology class.

Through the study of history, social science, economics, and government, one attempts to understand the political, economic, and cultural idealolgies of his world.

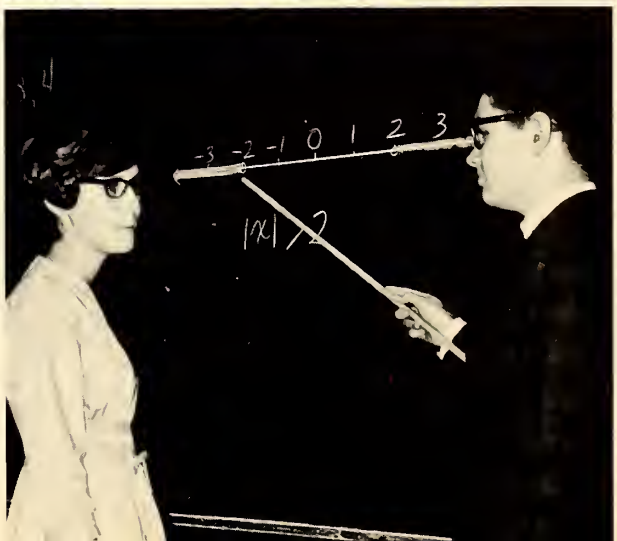
The various divisions of history take one from the ancient civilizations to modern times. Since it covers such a long span of time, several courses are offered to give the student a firm foundation on which to grow. World History, Indiana History, and Psychology are part of this foundation as it is offered to Wood students.

Becky Ramsey and Frank Stanley work on a chemistry experiment.

A solid foundation in math and science is necessary to prepare today's student for the advancing world of automation. As work in electronics and engineering becomes more specialized, students wanting to compete in these fields must gain a deeper knowledge of both subjects.

Math and science go hand in hand, each depending on the other in order to completely understand the work involved in each. From basic addition and physical science to complex equations and chemistry, Wood's math and science departments give their students the necessary training.

Sandra Cassidy points to a model of the earth's surface as classmate David Mc Cune watches.



Gary Dailey and Linda McGinley work a math equation on the blackboard.

Students in art productions concentrate on their projects.

Seven different courses give the art student a basic knowledge of artistic principles and a chance to sharpen his talents with advanced work.

Creation and appreciation of form and color may be gained by work in sculpture, ceramics, craft arts, jewelry, photography, and commercial art, beside the basis art courses.

Last spring two student works, a sculpture and watercolor, were obtained and placed with the school's art collection.

Science's reality, art's romance meet

Larry Lee shapes a clay model.

Dampened cloths help smooth the ceramics being done by Dorothy Reed.

Miss Herndon and class take dictation in the new secretarial practice laboratory.

Peggy Hattiex and Gretchen Crawford tabulate a column of figures.

A typing class works to improve their speed.

New practice lab readies secretaries

By offering a wide range of courses, the Wood business education department strives to prepare the business-minded student for the future. The latest varieties of electric and standard typewriters and office machines equip the classrooms, with the new secretarial practice laboratory the most modern.

In the new secretarial lab, special machines are used to help teach the student. These machines include shorthand machines that are fastened to desks where each student sits. Recordings at different dictation speeds are then played, with the student taking the dictation in shorthand.

Robert Holman and Carolyn Anderson use a model to study digestion in their health class.

An advanced girls' physical education group demonstrates their gymnastic ability.

Mr. Caporale uses a magnetic board to point out a driving problem to Kenny Minor and Dixie Bell.

Full program of physical fitness followed

Today's emphasis is not only on an alert mind, but a modern American is expected to be physically fit as well. Under the supervision of the physical education faculty, students are not only taught the correct way to keep physically fit, but the related subjects of health and drivers' education.

In the two semesters of required physical education, the student learns the basic skills of physical fitness, and a fundamental knowledge of various games and sports.

Classes offer skills for home and job

Helen Doyle sews a seam as Donna Inskeep holds the material.

Educating young men and women for futures as housewives and homeowners are the home economics and industrial arts departments.

Home economics classes use the Cape Cod style cottage to put housekeeping techniques into actual practice. Classes in food preparation, clothing, family living and social practice also help prepare the future housewives.

Skills to assist a boy in his job or do the necessary work around the home are taught in such classes as wood, metal, and electric shops, printing, and mechanical drawing.

Advanced printing student Mike Crossley helps Mr. Van Lieu prepare the new offset press for a run.

Pupils train for careers in grooming

Patty Ogle combs and styles her customer's hair.

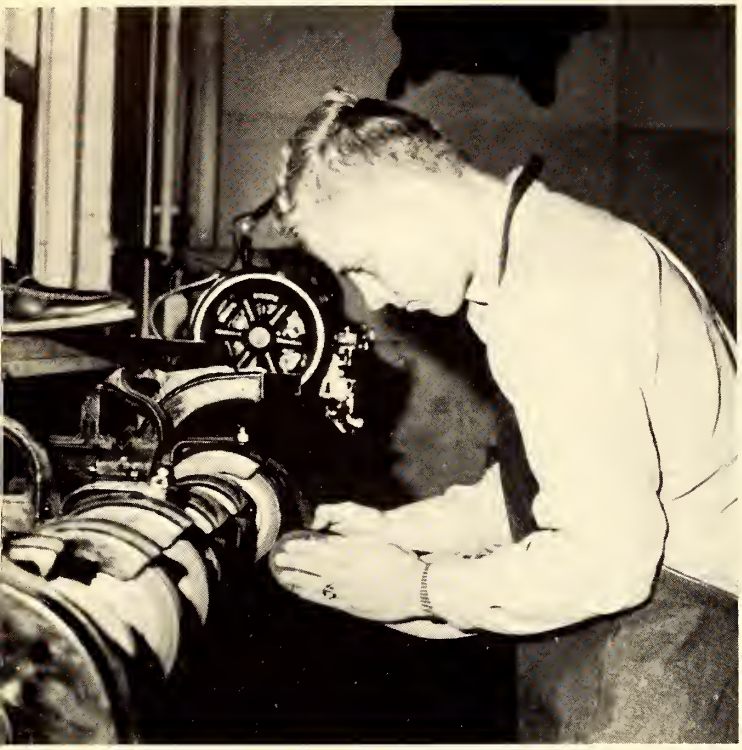
Concentrating on shaping the neckline properly is Delores Brandlein.

Greg Northington checks his work as Mr. Davis watches.

Beauty culture and barbering classes at Wood are unique because no other high school in America provides the full training required by the state licensing boards of barbers and beauty operators.

Curriculum for both courses includes theory as well as practical work. Theory requires a knowledge of human anatomy, especially of the head and skin.

Barbering students spend the first few weeks perfecting their cutting technique before they cut their first head of hair. Girls enrolled in beauty culture shampoo and set the human hair of manequins for practice.



Mike Schlake smoothes a new sole.

Among the courses offered in our vocational program are commercial foods, shoe repair, cleaning and pressing, auto body, and service station. Each teaches the student a marketable skill by working each day in completely equipped classroom-shops.

In commercial foods a student is tutored to be able to work in a cafeteria or restaurant, while shoe repair teaches a boy to repair shoes by actually doing so.

Auto body and service station give a boy a chance to be a competent auto mechanic or repairman, and the cleaning and pressing course presents a student with an opportunity to be skilled in the field of dry cleaning by actual work.

Wood's strength is in its people—people who work together each day to meet life's challenges, giving Harry E. Wood High School the life that makes it an academic force.

It is its people, learning, teaching, working, who make Wood more than an educational statistic. It is their ideas and their work to make those ideas fact that have created a unique school, produced a breathing model of working brotherhood, and made a concept into a reality.

Wood's workers keep school running

Wood's various staffs form an intregal part of our school life. Cafeteria workers capably manage the lunchroom and kitchens, doing their best to serve healthful food in sanitary surroundings to the 2700 Woodchucks who eat there each day.

The custodial staff keeps Wood clean and in top condition, while the office staff tackles endless secretarial work to keep the school running smoothly. The Woodchuck spirit of willing service is always evident.

Wood's versatility is in its activities—events and organizations that cause students to think, to act, to experiment, to accomplish. It is not easy to lead, or contribute significantly to a group.

Leadership ability is an intangible—falling to some with brilliant minds, others with engaging personalities, or still others with overpowering stamina. Each has a place at Harry E. Wood.

Led by the Student Council, which serves as liaison between administration and student body, Wood's clubs and organizations provide aid and service to both our school and community.

Scholarship, citizenship, and participation in extra-curricular activities are some of the requirements for membership in Key Club and Tri-Hi-Y, international service organizations.

Projects undertaken by the Key Club this year included co-sponsorship of a coat check at games, and participating in the Tuberculosis and Job Opportunity campaigns.

Proceeds from the Tri-Hi-Y's magazine subscription sales went to their needy family program at Christmas time. This is the group's main project.

Junior Red Cross members began their year with a school-wide membership drive through the homerooms. Again this year, their major project was filling large chests with medical and school supplies to be sent to schools overseas.

New half-time shows feature Band

Led by co-drum majors Frank Duncan and Roger Herring, Wood's Marching band made a good showing in both the Veteran's Day and Christmas Parades, as well as performing at half-time performances during football season, and the new half-time shows in our new gym.

Under the direction of Mr. Brittian, the regional champions began their season early with the Football Jamboree in September. The band went on to enter ensemble contests at Indiana Central in early spring.

More than sixteen girls serve as drill team members, Hewettes, and Majorettes, and perform at half time also. The drill team, newly formed this year, was featured at half-time shows during basketball season. Majorettes and Hewettes march with the band during parades and performances.

Vocal groups sing at Fall Festival

A highlight of the Vocal Music Department year was their presentation of "Oklahoma". Members of all groups combined to give the production. Christmas also marked a time for Wood's singers to display their talents, by presenting their annual vocal music program, to the entire student body. Choir members also sang Carols for the citizens of Indianapolis on the Circle.

Presentation of various other programs during the year, including the Fall Festival, served to expose members to the aspects of public singing.

After serving an apprenticeship in Goldinaires or Boy's Concert Club, students are chosen by audition for membership in Senior Choir or one of the Ensemble groups.

Members combine work and study

Wood began its first year of membership in V.I.C.A., or Vocational Industrial Clubs of America, by being host for the First Annual Indiana V.I.C.A. Leadership Conference in November.

V.I.C.A. is a national organization serving youth enrolled full-time in trade, industrial, and technical education classes, and Wood's D.C.E. students are all members.

D.C.E., or Diversified Cooperative Education, is a program providing classroom training in a job area. Students also work at least 20 hours per week on the job. Two delegates and four candidates for state offices attended the state D.C.E. convention this winter.

Promoting interest in the fields of speech and theater is the purpose of the speech and dramatics groups. Students interested in speech often find themselves getting up before dawn on Saturday mornings in order to attend a speech meet in Peru, Vincennes, or Bloomington. Dramatics Club members spend all their extra time in rehearsals for their productions.

Two productions were given this year, Arsenic and Old Lace and the Agatha Christie thriller, "The Mousetrap". Actors who acquire 10 points by appearing in productions may become members of the National Thespian Society.

The National Forensic League began in its second year at Wood. N.F.L. is a national honorary which opens membership to speech and debate participants.

Exploratory group is largest in city

With its 32 members, Wood's Exploratory Teaching group was the largest in any city high school for the third semester. Combining with the Future Teachers of America for a total membership of 87, the two groups made several field trips to colleges and universities during the year. They also sponsor an annual Christmas tea for all of the Exploratory Teachers in the city.

The group's activities express their motto, "Prepare yourself today for what might come tomorrow." Designed to give the student experience and information about the teaching profession, the Exploratory program gives each student an opportunity to assist classroom teachers either at Wood or a nearby elementary school. Requirements for membership include senior status, "C" grade average, and evidence of good citizenship.

Organized to further scholarship, service, leadership, and character, the National Honor Society opens membership to students who maintain a "B" average and show evidence of integrity, self reliance, and initiative.

This year the Junior Honor Society took first prize for their Homecoming float.

The peppiest organization at Wood is the Cheerblock. Supporting our teams with enthusiastic spirit, they appear at all games.

Under the sponsorship of Mrs. Emminger, they sponsored several activities, including a coat check with the Key Club at basketball games.

YOUTH LOOKS AT LITERATURE—Donna Perry, Pam Mozingo, Sharon White, Mr. Kult, Gayle Mitchell, and Linda Loflin.

Two academic teams from Wood appeared on local television programs, "Youth Looks at Literature" and "Exercise in Knowledge".

Six to eight students were chosen to represent Wood on the "Literature" program. They were assigned "The Declaration of Independence" to study, and later discussed it on television. Sponsors of "Youth Looks at Literature" are Mrs. Scofield, English Department Head, and Mr. Kult.

The "Exercise in Knowledge" program features teams of students from local high schools. The teams are quizzed on subjects of current events, history, math, science and other liberal arts subjects.

EXERCISE IN KNOWLEDGE—Danny Quinlan, Salvatore Guerrieri, Shelton Oakes, and Steve Sloan.

Assistants help in all school offices

Students very seldom have spare time if they serve as assistants in one of Wood's several offices and guidance center.

They do all types of jobs to help relieve the permanent staff. Assistants deliver messages, time students for tests in the guidance center, answer telephones, file, or type.

Spanish Club officers and members extend membership to any Wood student presently enrolled in class or has had one semester of Spanish.

The initiate must express a sincere interest in the club's purpose, which is to gain a better understanding of the language, and the customs of the people. The club's program includes field trips and school projects.

Staff works to keep Log's high rating

Melody Pettis, Frank Duncan and Elvis Fields work on copy for their sports section.

Operating with one of the smallest staffs in high school journalism, the Wood Log has received first place ratings for the last three years, and this year's staff has been working long after-school hours to keep the record intact.

Consisting of one editor for each yearbook section, the staff also includes a few assistants. Each editor is responsible for the planning of his pages, and providing the necessary copy and head-lines. They also schedule pictures needed with the photographers.

Besides producing the Wood Log, the staff sponsors Homecoming each year, supervising the election of royalty and organizing the parade and other activities. Assisting in the all-school picture taking in November is another staff project.

Working to inform the public of Wood activities is the News Bureau. They prepare news and feature articles to send to the city newspapers.

Publications typist, Julia Haddix, types captions and copy for the 1967 Wood Log.

Senior section editor Charles Baker hands Debra Mathis another box of underclassman pictures to be alphabetized for her section.

Ellen Franklin types Sue Odom's story for the News Bureau.

News Bureau members Bill Loyd, Rosemary Reed, Patty Al'es, and Marcia Baker look over other school newspapers and files for story ideas.

Wood's spirit is moved through athletics—the single happening that infects everyone when the honor of the school is at stake. No outsider can appreciate the effort and dedication that goes into a great team, nor can he enjoy the ultimate thrill of athletic combat.

Whether student spectator or participating athlete, Wood students are aware of their responsibilities to win with dignity and compete with maturity.

Cheerleaders channel pep, enthusiasm

Spirit is needed to win a game, and the Woodchuck cheerleaders have plenty to help our teams to victory. They direct enthusiasm and let the team know the crowd is there to cheer all the way.

Besides being at all athletic activities, the cheerleaders also arrange the pep sessions. A pep session is a very important part of a school's life because it helps build school spirit and lets the teams know that the student body is backing them.

Of the twelve cheerleaders there are four varsity, five reserve, and three freshman. To become a cheerleader a person must try out, be accepted by the sponsor Mrs. Cook, and Mr. Emery. A "C" grade average must also be maintained in order to remain eligible.

Coach Caporale and Football Jamboree Queen Linda Scarbrough discuss plans for the Jamboree.

An inexperienced squad and key veterans plagued by injuries was the picture for the 1966 football season.

Only Jim Johnson had previous varsity experience in the line, and was one of the boys slowed by injuries.

Veterans in the backfield included quarterback Phil Moore, halfback and key line backer Ken Bellamy, and Carl Harris, quarterback and safety man on defense.

The Woodchucks won at Sheridan 20-0, and played well against city rival Kennedy, only to lose in the last 9 seconds, 18-16. Leading scorer and ground gainer was fullback Jim Edmonds, who scored three touchdowns and had a 4.7 average, carrying the ball 106 times for 502 yards.

Honored by the Kiwanis Club for high scholastic average was Carl Harris. Rodney Clark, because of his versatility in performing in the backfield and line, was honored as Most Valuable Player.

Mike Schlake was winner of the Iron Men's trophy, based upon dependability, sacrifice, loyalty, and outstanding play displayed. The Most Improved award went to Steve Morelock, who in his first year of football improved rapidly to gain a position on the starting offensive and defensive teams.

Steve Kritsch, was awarded the Best Mental Attitude trophy, and Rudy Johnson won the Ball Hawks award.

Freshman football had its best season at Wood since 1963, under new coach Gene Robertson. Not playing their last game because of filling varsity positions vacant because of injuries, they presented the school with a 3-3-1 record.

All team members received freshman pin awards at season's end.

Two more points for Northington, as he drives around an opponent.

With a 17 point victory over City, Sectional, and Regional Champ Shortridge, other victories over Washington and Attucks, and a double win over Southside rival Manual, the varsity posted its best season. The team boasted the leading scorer in the city with Gregg Northington, and number nine leading scorer with Ken Morgan.

Beating opponents by a 13 point average per game, the Woodchucks finished the season with the best record in city competition as compared to any team in the city. The only loss in city play was during the city Tourney, in overtime to City champ Shortridge.

After two victories in early Sectional play, Wood lost a heartbreaker to co-favorite, Southport, 61-58.

Morgan and Northington, the team's "double threat", were named co-captains. Northington was also honored as Most Valuable Player and for Most Rebounds. Cliff Meredith was named Most Improved, while Dave Ferrell won the Best Mental Attitude Award.

to better season

"Vast improvement is the answer", says head baseball coach Ed Ward of his 1966 team that showed great potential, but was not fully developed.

Ward also stated that with only losing three seniors by graduation, the players left will have time to mold and bring out all potential this spring.

Ronnie Reese, Bill Dunn, and Buddy Williams were the three 1966 graduates. Reese was voted by teammates as the most valuable player and was also a three year letterman. Dunn received Most Improved Player and first year varsity awards, while Williams received his jacket award.

For the first time, Wood played a reserve and freshman schedule as well as varsity.

Eight returning lettermen are Steve Kritsch, Ricky Hagan, Norm Shaw, Lige Mixon, Jim Scott, Rodney Clark, Larry Ragan, and Steve Reese.

Mixon and Hagan were trophy award winners for best mental attitude and best batting average, respectively.

Heartbreak was the word for the 1965-1966 Vood Tennis Team because of losing several meets 3 and individual matches going three sets in ost instances. Mr. Davidson, in his first year as oach, said, "These boys have great potential. rown is the best sophomore I've ever seen, and akes is learning fast."

In the city tourney, Lester Brown was seeded umber one and expected to win. However, facing ammy Williams of Attucks, who Brown had al-eady defeated in regular season play, Brown was pset in the semi-finals.

Oakes played the number one seed in the three an position and was beaten 8-6, 2-6, 6-1. Teaming ith Brown, and again facing the number one ed in doubles, they lost a disputed match to anual 4-6, 7-5, 6-2.

At the season's conclusion, Brown was named ost Valuable, Oakes was named Most Improved, nd Tom Enochs was awarded the Best Mental ttitude Trophy. Oakes and Brown were also oted co-captains.

Spring golf takes time and patience

Golf coach Wilson had three returning lettermen, including three year letterman Chuck Kirkwood. Chuck, being one of the few students at Wood with any golf experience, was a great help to the other, less experienced players. Besides Kirkwood, there was Larry Byrnes and Hugh Barnes, returning to bolster the team.

First-year men Mike Beck and Allen Flora were also a help toward the end of the season. Beck, who won the Best Mental Attitude Award, made great improvement, and Flora showed promise, but was a graduating senior.

Larry Byrnes was awarded the Most Improved trophy, and for the third year straight, Kirkwood was voted Most Valuable.

Chuck Kirkwood shows the back stroke which made him the team's most valuable player.

Wood is extremely fortunate in possessing loyal friends and supporters throughout the school year to lend us help and inspiration.

Without the aid that these businesses and individuals of our community supply our school, Wood High School, Wood High School would not be able to fulfill its duty to its students.

HEADQUARTERS IN INDIANA . . .

A World-Famous Trademark

Around the turn of the century, a relatively unknown artist named Francis Barraud discovered his little dog "Nipper" listening in front of his new talking machine, ear cocked to one side. Barraud found the scene so appealing he immediately set it down on canvas.

Today "Nipper" is the most famous dog in the world. As a trademark used on the products of the RCA Victor Home Instruments Division as well as on millions of RCA Victor records, "Nipper" makes his home in Indiana! More than 25,000 Hoosiers work at RCA Victor plants in Indianapolis, Bloomington, and Monticello, and at the Marion Electronic Component and Devices plant.

Both the RCA Victor Home Instruments Division and the RCA Sales Corporation call Indianapolis "home." The planning, designing, and selling of all Home Instrument products originate from these famous RCA activities. Their top management, engineering, styling, product planning, sales and advertising functions concerning television, radio, phonograph and tape recorder products all make their headquarters in Indiana. "Nipper" truly is located at 600 North Sherman Drive, Indianapolis, Indiana!
